McDermottWard offers elder law attorneys. Elder law addresses the legal, health care and financial needs of the elderly. Elder law is a practice that, depending on the client's concerns, may include several other types of law such as estate planning, guardianships and conservatorships, or government benefits law. This is because many problems facing the elderly are similar to problems facing persons with disabilities or persons poor enough to need government assistance, or wealthy enough to worry about estate.

The attorneys at McDermottWard are available on short notice to assist families who are attempting to organize the affairs of a loved one in declining mental and/or physical health. We also advise clients on long term care planning and the support system available to a client and the client's caregiver.
